Tree Burls

- David Hibbert -

A small gallery showcasing some of the burls found on local trees, as well as some trees found much further afield across Australia.

A lignotuber is a woody swelling of the root crown found on some plants. It protects the root stem from damage by things such as fire. Lignotubers are also known as root collar burls. Some eucalypts have lignotubers.

Sometimes what appears to be a burl may instead be an ant nest. Some species of black ants are known to build homes on the inside of a tree when an opening in the tree is found.

They may then feed on white-ants found within the host tree.
