

Located at the west end of Leckie Park on Paynes Ave and beside the (UT Creek).

While not the original structure on the site, Dove cottage is none-the-less based strongly upon the early miners huts that were built throughout the district during the 1800s and into the early 1900s. It's small and simple construction made for easy building and maintenance, while adequately meeting the miners needs at the time.

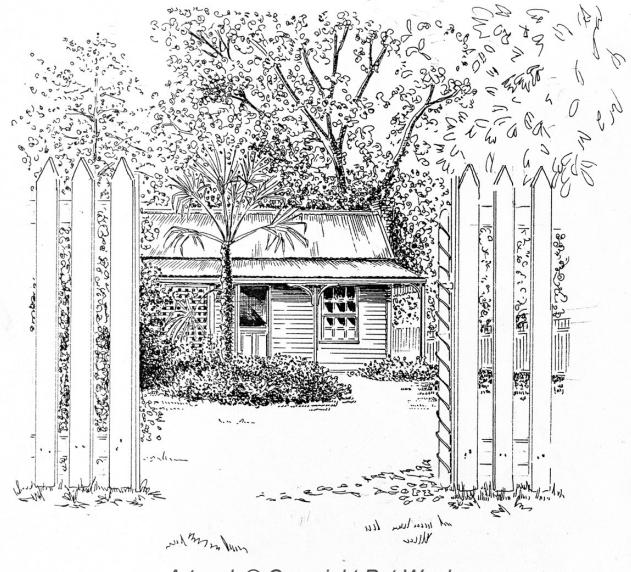

While the cottage is currently vacant, it has for the most part been occupied by local people, including Sarah Dove who lost her previous home in the 1939 Black Friday fires that ravished the state. She remained the occupant up until the early 1980's.

In 2009 the local history organisation Murrindindi Historic Register (now Alexandra Historical Society) applied to use the historic cottage as their place of business. Federal Government funding of $75,000 in 2010 saw the cottage fully renovated by November 2010.

Today the structure is open on select days.
